

Many students at The University of South Carolina commute from to and from class and often struggle to find parking near their class building. During peak hours, full lots and varied accessibility forces commuters to circle campus repeatedly, causing delays, missed segments of lectures, and added stress. This problem affects students who rely on personal vehicles to reach campus and need a more predictable way to locate parking quickly.